

Coronation Will Be T.V.'s 'Biggest'

By KENNETH HARRIS

ONE of America's leading television producers is looking forward to seeing one of the most colorful pieces of European history being enacted in their schools and drawing-rooms.

The most striking single piece of evidence both of the amount of public interest in and professional preparation for the televising of the Coronation is the "Teacher's Guide." Some months ago, the Columbia Broadcasting System—the smallest, but, for my money, the best of the four networks—the last of the four could be supplied with some background material which would enable them to give a few lessons to their classes so that the children could "look in" at the Coronation and see not only the symbolic spectacle, but understand some of the things behind it—feel something of the difference between the monarchic system of democracy and their own Republican form, for example. It occurred to the Columbia directors that if two schools were interested in this, other might be interested too. So they made enquiries. Immediately replied saying that they would be delighted to have such "background" information.

Election Experiences

Whether it is right about that or not remains to be seen, but there is no doubt that the nation is stimulating the "electoral" to a pitch of excitement and interest which has certainly had no previous parallel. It is being helped, and inspired, by the public reaction to the televising of the two American party conventions at Chicago last July. These two great events, followed by the actual election campaign—in which television's role is generally supposed to have eclipsed that of press—have placed before the eyes of the American people the experience of the four big television companies. And each of them is aware that public interest in the Coronation is probably even higher than that in a conventional election, since millions of children and people not particularly interested in politics are ardently looking forward to seeing one of the most colorful pieces of European history being enacted in their schools and drawing-rooms.

Guide Book

The volume and variety of the demand was such that Columbia decided to publish a "Teacher's Guide" to the Coronation. The C.B.S. really went to town. It has produced a closely typed 21-page booklet, which not only describes the history and ceremony of the Coronation, but also contains a list of the various "background" information.

Radio Review Musical Extremes

ALTHOUGH strictly speaking, matters musical do not fall within the review of this column, I cannot resist contributing an appreciation of the comprehensive service provided by the Yarnal's musical department. A broad field is covered, and few musical tastes can claim to be neglected. Of course there is much room for improvement, but this is bound up with increased financial allocation, which seems almost utopian under present conditions.

The two musical extremes probably have the most cause for complaint (except for devotees of Wagner, Strauss and Lehar). On the one hand, there is an unusually high proportion of chamber music enthusiasts in the country, but, as a rule, they can only count on the half-hour evening concert a week (although there are occasional exceptions). At the other end of the scale, lovers of jazz (in the purist sense) have been neglected over the past year. They were given a history of jazz and then a long silence. A new series, concentrating the work of Benny Goodman (to be followed by Louis Armstrong) was inaugurated this week, and should serve to meet the demand.

Otherwise there is handsome musical fare. Serious orchestral music ranging from Martin to Mahler reaches us in profusion; piano and vocal recitals are given regularly; oratorios sweep through the air; while our operatic serial comes along every Saturday and is now supplemented by extra ration on the Second Programme. Light classical selections and popular dance music are poured out in plenty and the only barrier seems to be the problem of acquiring new recordings. Special pleading is due for the attention to local music. Kol Yarnal cannot afford to be a financial paragon of the arts, but it can offer valuable publicity and foster popularity.

Drury May I

The history of Drury May I of the First of May was a dreary affair. There was the same public-meat-and-drink, which, as a rule, they can only count on the half-hour evening concert a week (although there are occasional exceptions). At the other end of the scale, lovers of jazz (in the purist sense) have been neglected over the past year. They were given a history of jazz and then a long silence.
